

Holocaust at Downing Street

Thursday 3 April 2008

The Prime Minister, Gordon Brown, urged people to join the debate on some of the biggest challenges of our times by logging onto a new “Progressive Governance” website. The website was set up to coincide with a summit that weekend in London. Climate change, security threats, global poverty and economic globalisation were to be discussed at the conference, attended by twenty world leaders.

On the morning of Thursday 3 April 2008 a logo featuring a clearly visible, correctly-oriented NSDAP swastika appeared on the 10 Downing Street website, the official website of the Prime Minister’s residence.

By 11pm that night, after mocking emails had been sent to the site administrator and with wonderment spreading web-wide, the site had become Password Restricted.

At midday the following day the site was restored to public access, but with a sanitised logo. One report was that the original logo made a reappearance at 3pm but disappeared again four minutes later.

By the evening of 4 April the site seemed to have incorporated most of the suggestions made on the Devil's Kitchen blog concerning its poor design.

‘Promoting Prosperity’ through National Socialism

By Lester Haines

Friday 4th April 2008 08:54 GMT

The powers that be yesterday blocked unauthorised access to the website of the Progressive Governance Summit following our discovery that it was, in lieu of “Promoting Prosperity,” actually promoting National Socialism.

The chilling proof of UK.gov’s plans for a blond-haired, blue-eyed future comes in the form of the logo, as seen here. Lurking in the shadows is the unmistakable crooked cross much beloved of Alsatian-owning vegetarians.

We were going to make our dossier available to the relevant authorities when it suddenly dawned on us that any attempt to alert them would certainly result in an early-morning knock at the door by men dressed in long black leather coats and bearing Progressive Governance armbands.

El Reg will continue to broadcast for as long as is possible, but if it suddenly falls silent, please...

Update

The site became reavailable to the unwashed masses at around lunchtime today – complete with denazified logo and nice YouTube greeting from Gordo. Bless.

- The logo is now sitting in the middle of nowhere, relating to nothing.
- It doesn't even align to the right edge of the YouTube video.
- Why (from a design point of view) is it cut off at those points when it is obviously part of a greater whole?
- Might it not have been better to align the logo to the right, cut it off at the right edge and fix the right and bottom edges at the right viewport edge and top of the menu bar respectively?
- The shade of background blue appears nowhere else on the site.
- The navigation uses arrow shapes, so even the fact that the background is rectangular looks wrong.

The whole thing's a shambles.

Alex Agius said – It is ridiculous to suggest that Gordon Brown is anything like Adolf Hitler. Hitler was elected.

“Stanislav” was a regular contributor to the Guido Fawkes political blog at this time, purporting to be a Polish plumber who had recently arrived in Britain. Trading as “stanislavplumbcheap4u” he offered “good clean job and no fucking about with Mrs” and “discount4cash.”

Subtlety was not Mr Stanislav’s trademark, and it was during precisely this period that he was at the peak of his powers.

The following content did not appear on the Number 10 website. This chilling description of the origins and execution of a projected holocaust at Downing Street has not been verified, approved or endorsed by the authorities.

You have been warned.
